

It's more than just cleaning up the winter debris and cutting off the spent flower stems in the heather bed. It's about making new friends who may or may not know anything about heather but have lots of questions. If you already grow and love heather you can share your knowledge. If you are new to growing this horticulture gem you can get advice from a more experienced heather grower. There are other reasons to participate in trimming the heather at one of the NEHS supported heather gardens: there is the enjoyable camaraderie and memorable garden vistas since each heather garden is situated in an outstanding public garden whose beauty and horticulture value is well established and maintained. The NEHS supported heather gardens are located on the Cape in MA, in New Hampshire, in Binghamton, New York and in New York City. Please check the CALENDAR and if you are near any of the sites and are available on the trimming date, The Society would welcome the extra help and the opportunity to renew friendships or make new friends.
